Vadim Alden is an experienced attorney representing small and large businesses, start-ups, and individuals in business and employment law. Vadim's corporate and business practice includes advising clients about business entities and start-up formation, drafting and negotiating employment contracts, commercial real estate leases, and working on a large number of acquisitions and related deals.

Vadim also serves as general counsel to several established and emerging companies in the Bay Area. For these companies, Vadim provides legal counsel in the areas of business entity formation, maintenance, and dissolution; executive compensation agreements, employee handbooks and policy guidelines; intellectual property protection, risk management, as well as general business and operational advice.

In addition to corporate work, Vadim has broad-based litigation experience, successfully representing clients in all phases of litigation, including through arbitration and trial. Vadim represents clients in commercial disputes and employment matters.

Before founding Alden Law PC, Vadim worked at both large and mid-size law firms in the San Francisco Bay Area, representing foreign and domestic clients in corporate, employment, products liability, and regulatory compliance matters in California and other U.S. states and territories.

Vadim is a member of the San Francisco Bar Association and the Contra Costa Bar Association. He regularly lectures and presents seminars on employment and business law. Vadim has been published in the San Francisco Daily Journal, and has been named a Rising Star by the Northern California Super Lawyers magazine in 2012 and 2013.

Vadim is a graduate of Santa Clara University School of Law. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree with honors from Claremont McKenna College.
